PALM SPRING SPMS STROKE CLINIC FEBRUARY 25TH

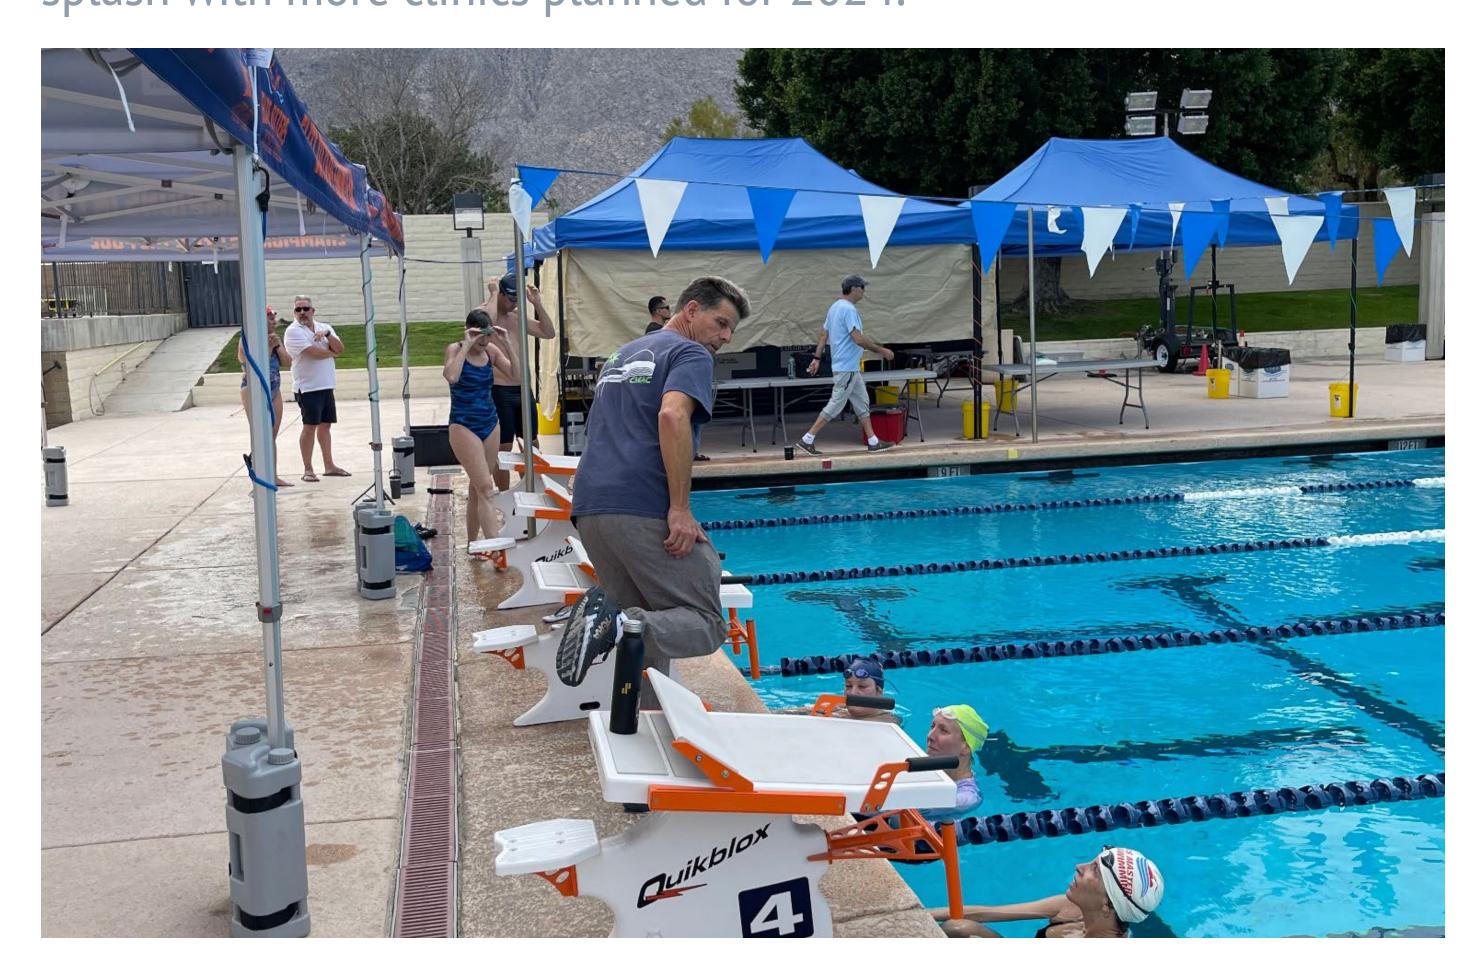

Submitted by: Ken Brishin | Chair@SPMasterSwim.org

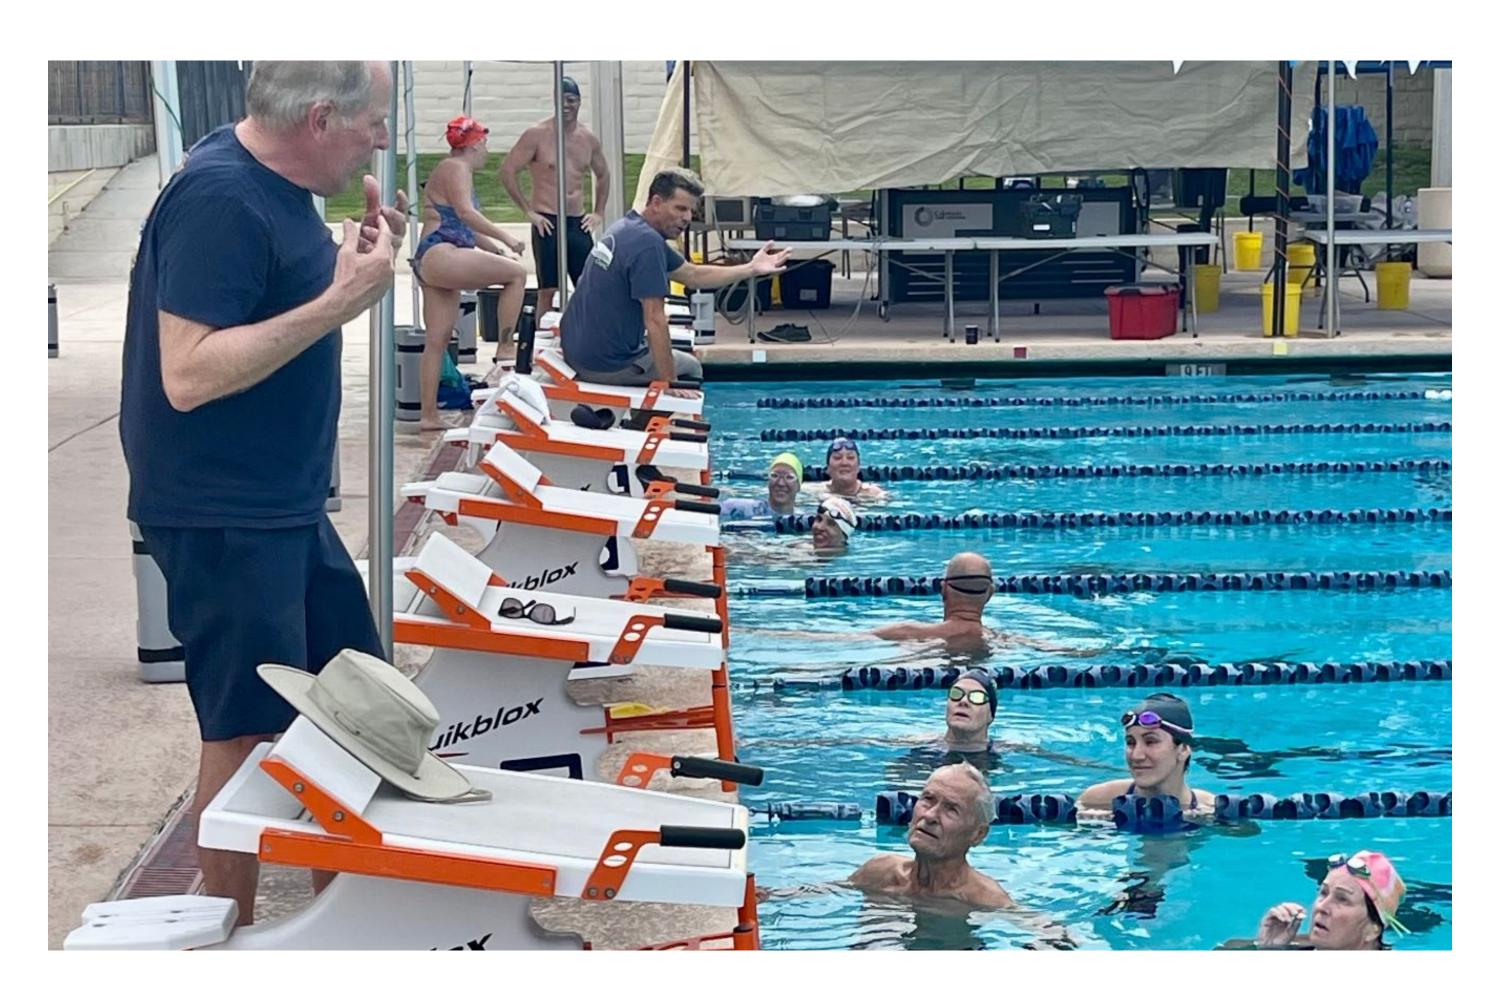

On the sun-filled Saturday, February 25th, a group of 18 SPMS members embarked on a journey to Palm Springs, setting the scene for an unforgettable day of aquatic learning. It was a dive into the world of swimming, where every stroke, start, and turn was transformed, thanks to the wisdom and expertise of our stellar coaches.

Leading this SPMS clinic were none other than - Ralph Porrazzo from Rose Bowl Aquatics, Kim Onisko of the Long Beach Grunions, and Diego Pombo from Costa Mesa Aquatics Club. Together, they conducted a top-notch clinic for SPMS members.

The swimmers plunged into a day filled with learning and laughter, emerging with new skills in the water. Each participant was thrilled to share that they increased their knowledge and perfected new techniques across all strokes, starts, and turns. Missed out on the clinic? Fear not! We're already making a splash with more clinics planned for 2024.

VIRGIL CHANCY WHISTLES WHILE HE WORKS

Submitted by: Christic Ciraulo | OpenWater@SPMasterSwim.org

This boy needs to learn to swim. We want to take him fishing. I can't swim, his grandfather can't swim, who's going to save us if Virgil can't swim?"

And that's the short version of why Virgil Chancy learned to swim. "My grandparents took me fishing all the time. So many times, I had to go in and help my grandmother get out of the water because she just would not let go of a fish," Virgil laughed.

Now, Virgil keeps busy officiating at USMS, USA Swimming, NCAA and special needs swim meets.

"I really enjoy the comradery of masters swimming. I love to see how masters swimmers progress. The beauty of masters is you can plug in to whatever level you want. You can focus on healthy lifestyles, goals, socialization, exercise, racing...we're here to have fun."

Virgil is involved in people of color swimming organizations, including as Membership Director of Diversity in Aquatics. He is also working to bring swimming back to Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCU).

In 2022, Virgil helped organize and officiate at the inaugural HBCU alumni swim meet. More than a dozen teams traveled to Moorehouse College in Atlanta with swimmers from the 50s, 60s, and 70s.

"When colleges start cutting budgets, they cut aquatics in particular," explained Virgil. "Many HBCU had very strong swimming programs that were eliminated. The only swim program going strong today is Howard University in Washington D.C. I'm on board with the concerted effort to get aquatics back on HBCU campuses.

"I know the cost of fielding a varsity swimming team is prohibitive for many colleges. We're focusing on getting campus club teams into HBCU and then having those colleges add masters swimming programs, which can pay for themselves."

Virgil was taught to swim in a Black YMCA in Toledo, Ohio, but was strongly urged to join the competitive swim program at the White Y, Glass City Aquatics. "I learned about racing and about racism at the same time," he said.

"I loved the competitive swimming, but I didn't like the White Y because they didn't want me there. I only kept swimming because my grandmother told me racism was an unfortunate fact of life and I needed to learn this life lesson. I had to learn to deal with it.

"My mom wanted to let me off the hook. But her mom, my grandmother, was right. From a very early age I learned how to channel the anger into a positive swimming career. I took out my frustration by excelling in swimming.

"Here's an example. Electronic timing in those days was not as prevalent as it is today. I was at the mercy of the timers. And if they didn't want me to win, they just stopped their watches a few seconds late. The swimmers knew, though.

"I learned to handle that type of aggression at a very early age. You never saw people like me on deck, running a meet. And those memories keep me on the deck now."

Although Virgil traveled quite a bit with his swim team, there was rarely other swimmers of color either in high school or AAU club swimming. "Some of my teammates were inclusive, some were not. It was based on the teaching of their parents. It was a 50/50 toss up whether a swimmer would welcome me or not. I rolled with it.

"That's what it was. Even when someone was receptive to friendship, I was leery, because my guard was always up. Sadly, one of the things that help me excel in age group, high school and college swimming was the bias I experienced. It became a motivator."

Virgil continued his education while serving in the Marine Corps, earning a bachelor's degree with a major in aviation from Southern Illinois University. For many years Virgil was in aviation project management, finishing up his service in aviation information security.

"I followed my dad and uncles into the Armed Services. I've lived all over Asia and the Middle East. I'm only semi-retired now," Virgil laughed.

Virgil performed many peripheral jobs while in the Marine Corps, including instructing Combat Water Survival.

"I'd be on deck and the trainees would be looking around, wondering where the instructor was. I'd stand up and introduce myself and I'd get the 'whoa, wait a minute, you know how to swim?' My reply was always, 'Yea, and now I'm going to find out if YOU know how to swim!' It really was a shocker for them and a little levity for me."

Virgil, who lives in the Inland Empire, has gotten back in the water. "I stressed out my back and knees, so now I work out at LA Fitness. There are four in my area, but the pools are too warm!"

Virgil enjoys the pool but stays away from the California open water scene. "I love SCUBA and respect the creatures down there, but I don't like diving in the cold waters of California.

"In Japan, I saw sea snakes — they backed me out of that water in a hurry! I also didn't like being around sharks, barracuda, mean sea lions and groupers. They are too big.

"My favorite dives places were the Sea of Cortez, Belize, and Okinawa. So much beauty. They were good times before, during and after the dives with food, entertainment and enjoying friends."

Virgil is currently planning his 2024 officiating and volunteering schedule. "It's all so exciting. I love participating in all these events because of what swimming has done for me. Every time I think of stopping or slowing down, something comes up that increases my enjoyment of the process. I love talking to folks and being an information source.

"I'll be in Indy with the Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Camp for USA Swimming Western Zone during the USA Swimming Trials in June. Then USMS Nationals. Being a USMS national DEI committee member, I feel it is important to be on deck. I also am Co-Chair for DEI Southern California Swimming committee."

Meanwhile, there are numerous USA Swimming and Masters Swimming meets that Virgil will be officiating this spring. Virgil proclaimed, laughing, "I'm having too much fun! I'm not ready to hang up my whistle just yet!"

100 X 50'S FOR A GREAT CAUSE

Submitted by: Christic Civaulo | OpenWater@SPMasterSwim.org

Dozens of SPMS swimmers signed up, donated, and swam The Great Relay to raise money to aid inner city students in their quests for college educations, on February 10th, at Middle College High School, Los Angeles,.

Although fundraising is the goal, the  $100 \times 50 \text{s}$  relay is the fun. A team captain rallies ten swimmers to come together to raise funds and donate, and then rotate through  $100 \times 50 \text{s}$  as the challenge.

The total fundraising topped $46,000! The top individual fundraisers were Amy Dantzler and Daniel Banchik from WH2O, and Paul Marc-Schweitzer, NYAC. The funds will be used to provide quality aquatics programming at Alliance Ted K. Tajima High School and Middle College High School, Los Angeles. These campuses would otherwise lack access to facilities, equipment and coaching staff needed to field swim teams.

The event is sponsored by The Trident Foundation, the brainchild of three masters swimmers in New York City, Jeremy Fain, Alan Fishman, and Kristin Gary. "We were all swimming masters together," explained Kristin, "and, unknowingly, we were all thinking along the same lines.... how can we give back to the community? I thought about teaching English as a Second Language, or teaching reading, but trying to break through the red tape was so onerous.

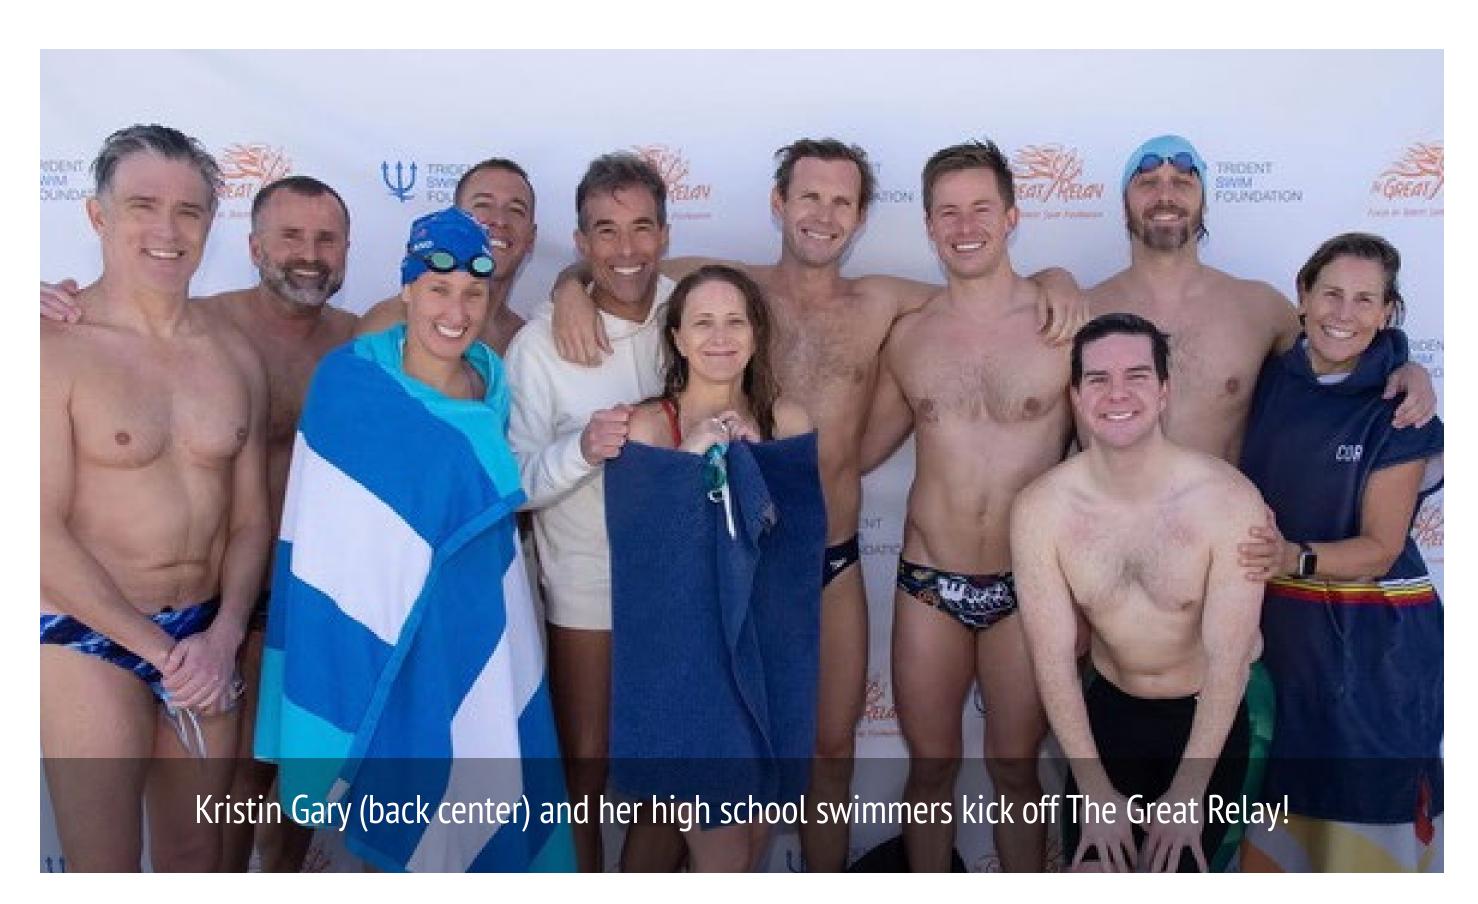

"At the same time, I was looking around my pool and realizing -- everyone was White, but looking at my social life and work - everyone was so diverse! Up to that point, I had never given it much thought.

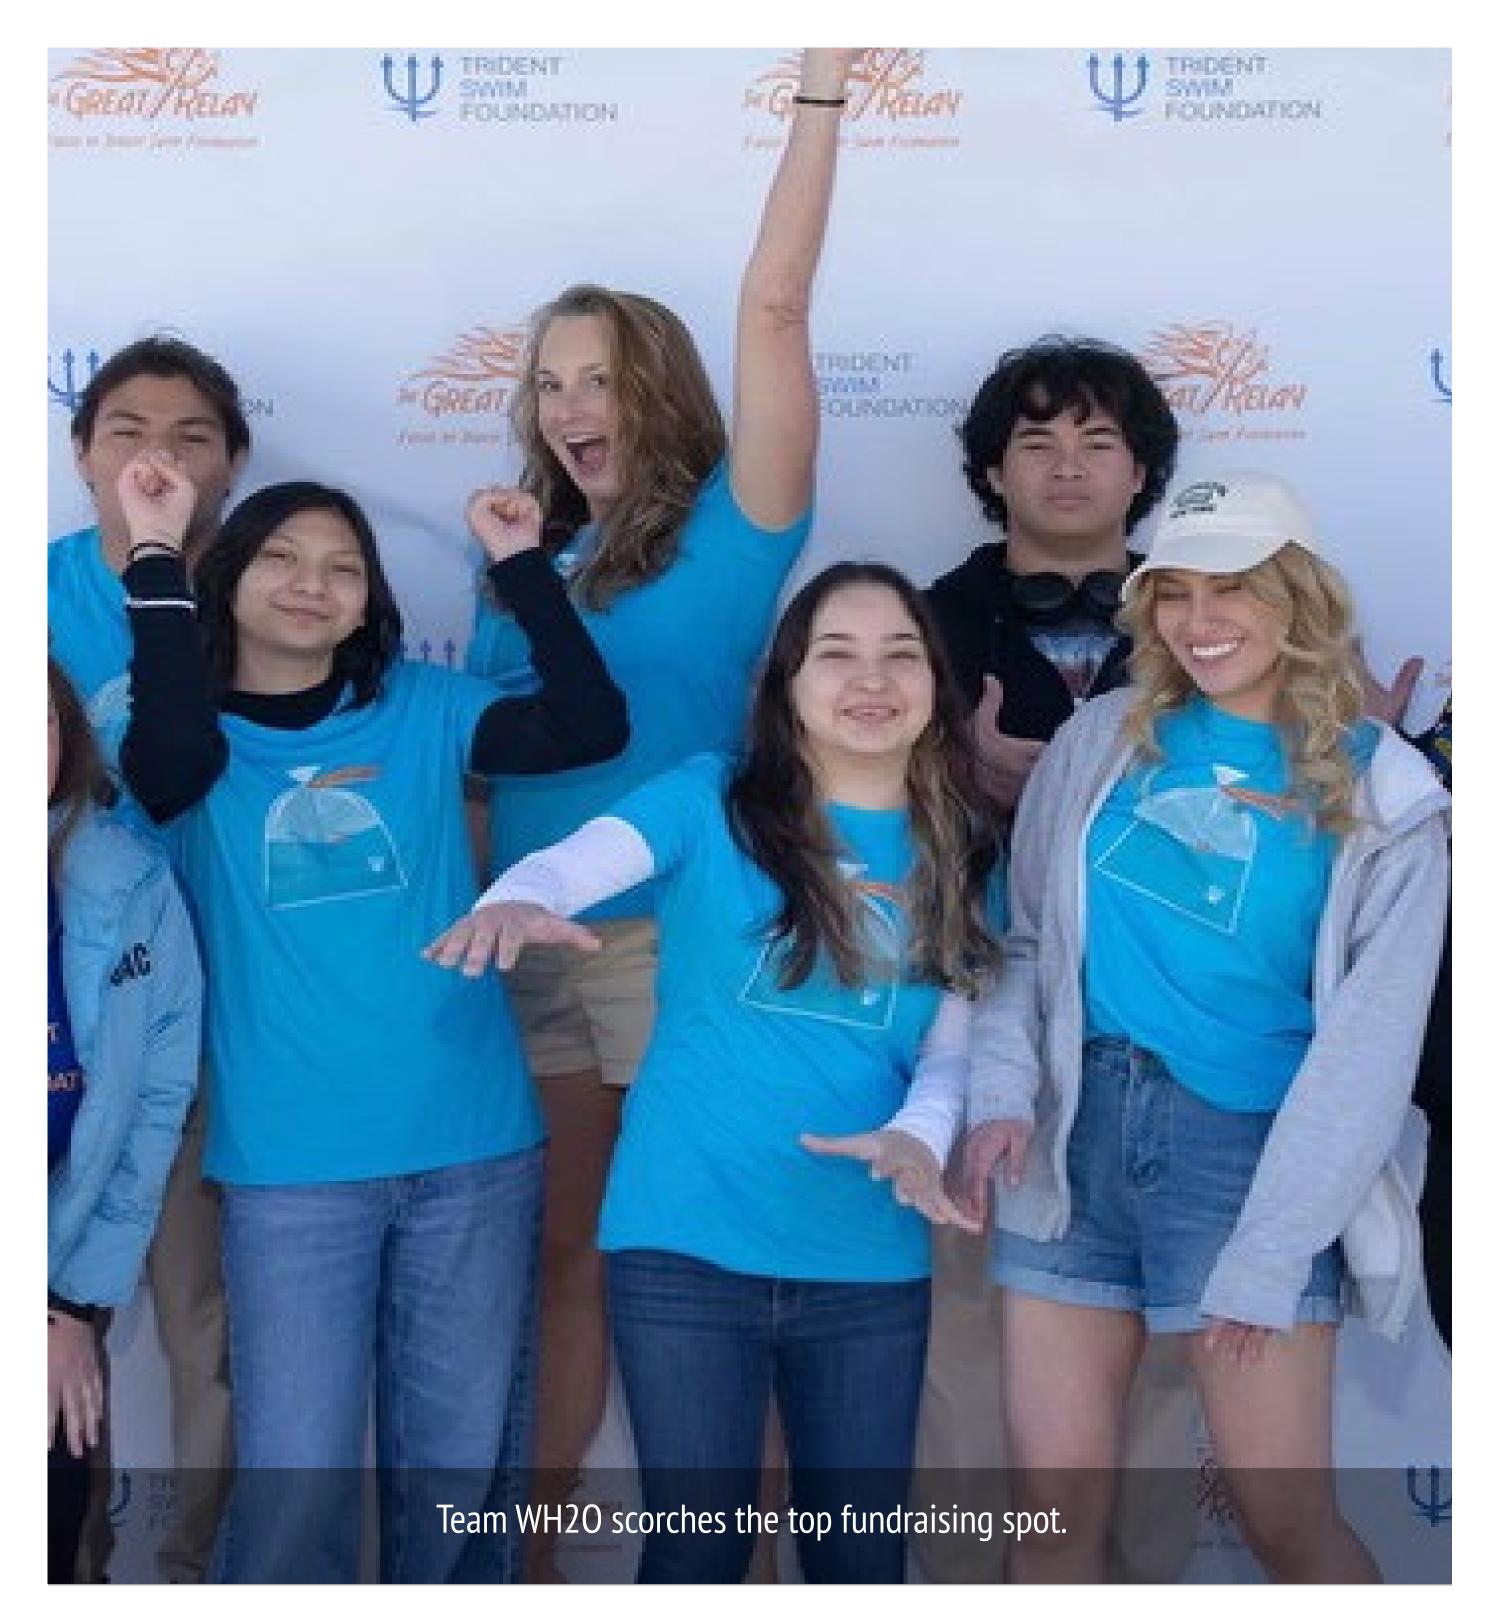

"Our experiences managing our athletics and academics growing up was a huge part of who we are now and our personal success stories. We wanted to share those opportunities with others."

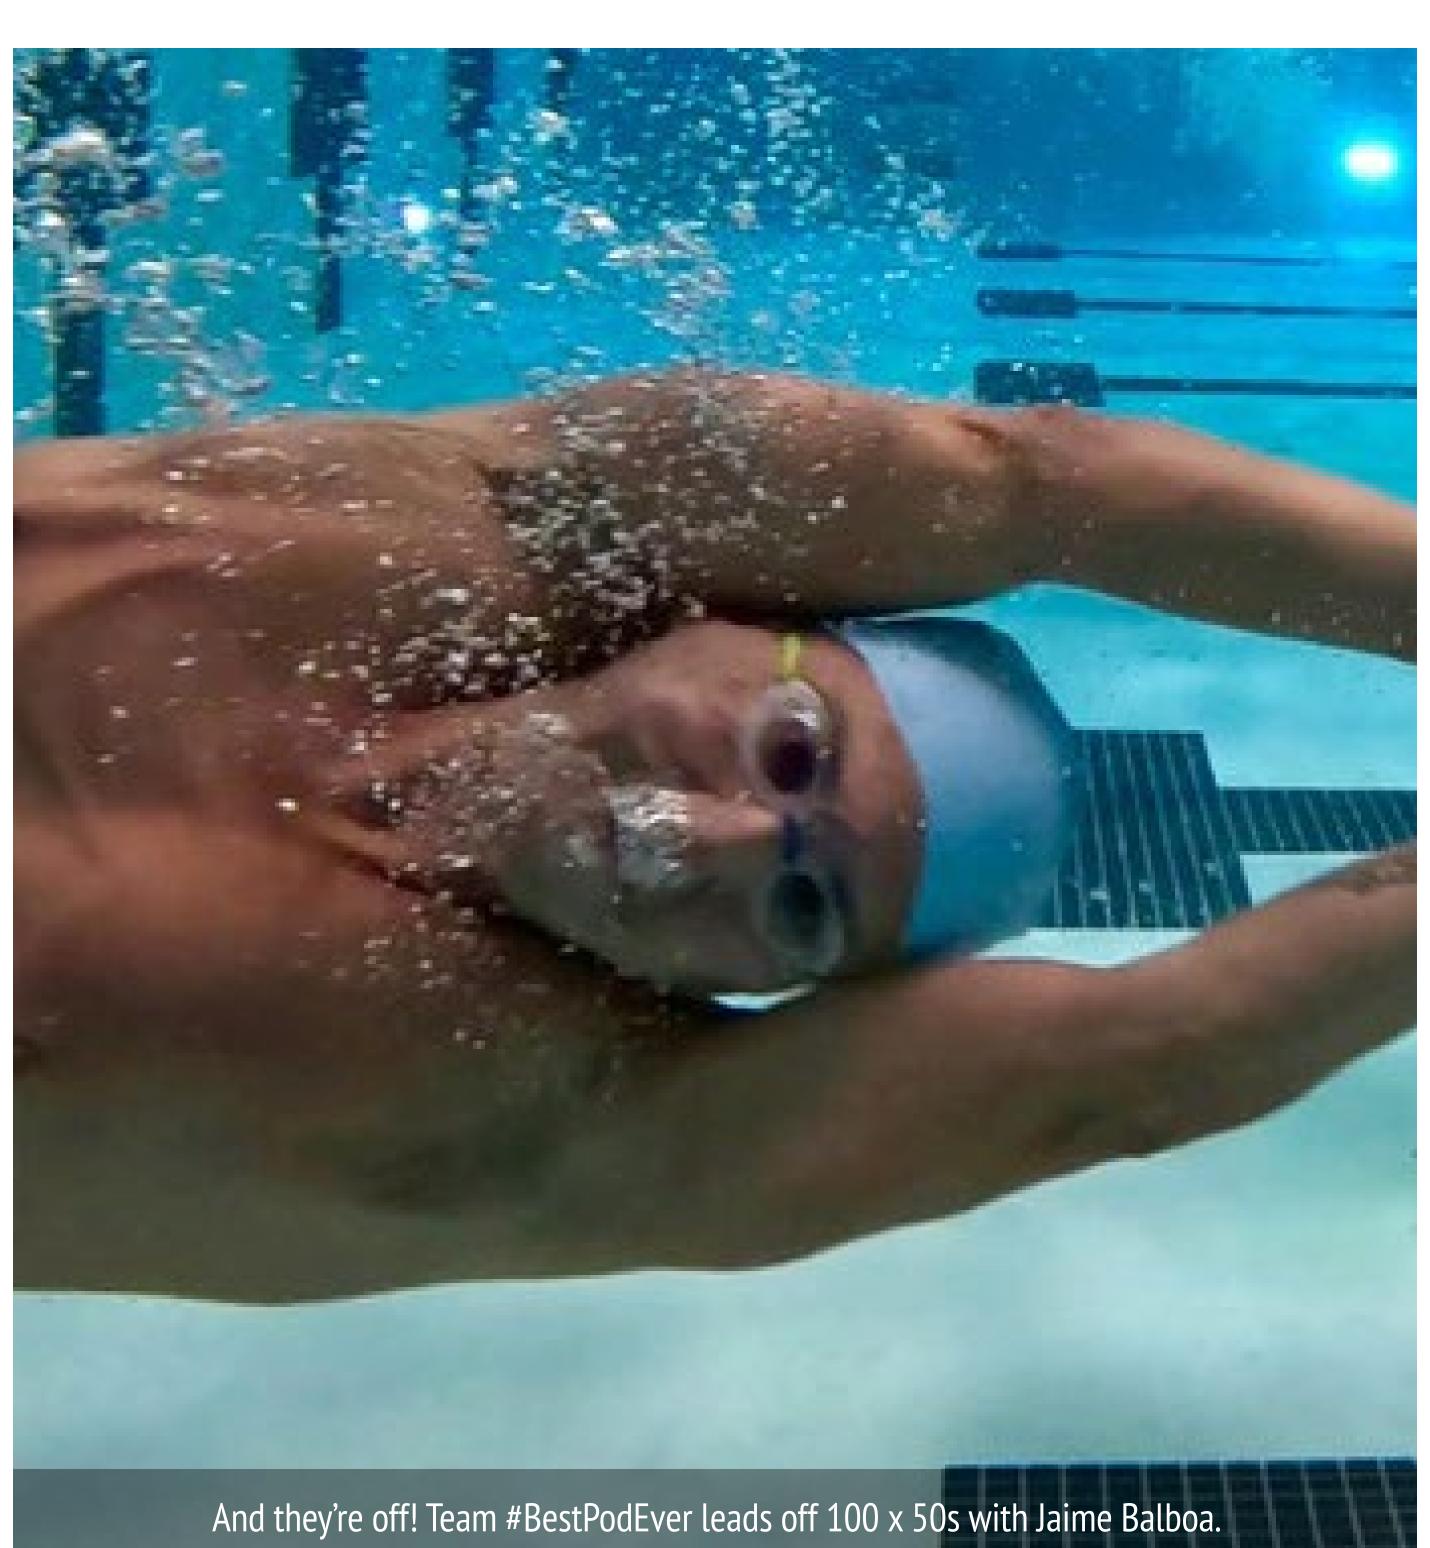

At its core, the program consists of a daily swim practice, at which all are levels are welcomed. If needed, the students are taught to swim and then go on to compete as a team under the guidance of Trident coaches. Team activities include teacher-mentored study halls, where students learn to apply their skills of time management, dedication, goal setting, and teamwork to their academics.

They are also offered a variety of wrap-around services such as academic tutoring, standardized test preparation, and college admissions counseling which includes navigating the intricacies of financial aid.

"We want to make swimming barrier free in economically disadvantaged areas," said Kristin. "You follow the rules, you come to swim practice every day, you do your homework. We'll help you through. We're very proud of our virtually perfect graduation and college acceptance rate."

MARKETING MATTERS!

Submitted by: Anita Cole | Marketing@SPMasterSwim.org

Every club has previous members who have not yet renewed for 2024. Let's work together to encourage these swimmers to renew asap. If you no longer see one of your previous lane mates, maybe check on him or her to find out why this swimmer has not renewed with USMS attaching to your club. The cornerstone of successful amazing Masters Swim Clubs is inclusivity: It is important for everyone to be warmly welcomed with friendship, support, fun, with plenty of coached swimming along the way!

April is Adults Learn to Swim Month. Hopefully your swim club is participating to teach adults to swim. Please encourage a non-swimming relative, friend, neighbor, or co-worker to go with you to the pool to learn to swim! Adult swimmers enjoy amazing aging. Club lane mates support each other at the wall and elsewhere. Each club develops its own personality largely determined by the coach or coaches on deck as well as the diversified roster of swimmers.

Each club needs to establish some goals and a flow chart of how to reach that goal. Retaining and growing membership is essential. I am encouraging coaches or other club leaders to request SPMS Luggage Tags, new orange SPMS Swim Caps, new SPMS Stickers and Static Decals with SPMS QR Code. They are available upon request. You can grab a supply at the next swim meet or just email your request with your name, number of items of each, and physical mailing address to me, Anita Cole.

TAG US ON INSTAGRAM: Please send photos to our instagram account via direct messages or tag @spmastersswimming in all your posts! This increases visibility of SPMS online! Ralph thanks you!

My committee members, Lucila Davies, Ralph Porrazzo, and I, are available to help coaches and club leaders reach their goals.

HERE, TAKE MY GOGGLES... WHY DO I LOVE MASTER SWIM? LET ME SHARE A STORY

Submitted by: Anita Cole | Marketing@SPMasterSwim.org

It was October 3, 2021. I had finally completed my 6th and final chemotherapy treatment in September and had scheduled the surgical removal of my port or VAD for mid October. My oncologist said she thought it was okay for me to swim again even if I still had my port. She too was a swimmer and tennis player in her spare time and so understood how anxious and happy I was to resume my sports.

So, I signed up for the SCM Swim Meet at Mission Viejo just making the September 29 deadline before the close of registration for this October 3, 2021 SCM Swim Meet.

I dove in off the blocks for my 100 IM event. It was not a good dive. I hit the water hard, chest first. My chest hurt so badly that I thought I must have busted the port area open, and so I looked around to see if blood was in the pool. No blood was visible! "That is good," I thought. Oh, no, what next! I felt my goggles and cap creeping up to the top point of my head. I had no hair at all, I mean no hair like anywhere. I lost it all from my chemo treatments for ovarian cancer. By the time I reached the middle of the pool, my cap and goggles were long gone. My bald head was totally exposed. How embarrassing I felt. Ugh! I kept on swimming. When I arrived at the end of the pool completing my butterfly lap, I touched the wall with both hands and a kind, handsome face was on the deck, low at my eye level. He looked into my eyes and said, "Here, take my goggles!" He then placed the eye pieces on my eyes, like I was his child, and put the straps around the back of my bald head and nodded at me to go. I left the wall and continued with my back stroke, breast, and freestyle laps. I was in a lane next to the wall and so climbed out using the conveniently located ladder.

When I stepped off the ladder onto the deck, a group of smiling, bald male swimmers all embraced me saying, "No hair, don't care!" It was such a sweet gesture. Then one of them dove into the pool to retrieve my Grunion Swim Cap and my goggles. I tried to find the swimmer who loaned me his goggles, but could not find him. I am still looking for him. If you are reading this, a big thank you to you. Those are my favorite goggles. They did so much more than keep the water out of my eyes. They made water form on the inside of the goggles from an act of such kindness to a stranger. I would love to thank this swimmer in person and maybe, even return his goggles. Please let me know who you are!

Masters Swimmers are the best!

Thank you all for being such wonderful anonymous friends to me on that special day at Mission Viejo Marguerite Aquatic Center as well as other times when so many of you cheer for me while I am swimming my pool events!

I love you all!
